

Emmaus (Luke 24:13-32), the disciples have just left Jerusalem and are on their way back home. As far as they are concerned, with the death of Jesus their dreams have been shattered and they are returning to their previous lives. But then, unexpectedly, they meet Jesus even though they do not recognise him.

Because they met Jesus and through the knowledge they have gained by the encounter, the disciples are given the courage to return to Jerusalem to share the good news of the resurrection with their community.

This story reminds us of the tradition concerning St Peter fleeing from likely crucifixion in Rome and along the road outside the city he encounters risen Jesus. Peter asks Jesus "Quo Vadis?" to which he replies, "I am going to Rome to be crucified again". Peter thereby gains the courage to continue his ministry and returns to the city, where he is eventually crucified.

Every day Jesus can be speaking to us to us directly through prayer and reflection or through what we read or see on television or the internet. But, just like the disciples, we don't recognise him either. Let us pray for a listening heart so that we can be ready to respond to the Lord in whatever way he may choose to approach us.

The Eucharist is at the centre of the Emmaus story. In his encyclical on the Eucharist Saint John Paul II invites us to be amazed by this altogether special and unique element of God's love for us. He tells us that the gift of the Eucharist evokes profound amazement and gratitude.

When speaking about the Eucharist in the Pro Cathedral, Archbishop Diarmuid Martin said:

"Those of us who share in the Eucharist are called to live our lives as witness to the self-giving love of Jesus with a similar love for those who are excluded: the homeless, the unemployed, the despised and the ostracised and those who are condemned to the margins of society."

This Easter may we journey together in faith as the disciples did on the road to Emmaus and may we be strengthened and encouraged as they were by our encounter with the Risen Lord.

Road to Emmaus

The artist Caravaggio is probably best known to us for his painting The Taking of Christ which was discovered in a Jesuit residence on Leeson Street and is now on display in our National Gallery. Amongst his other works is a painting called The Supper at Emmaus which, as you might expect, depicts Jesus having a meal with the two Disciples towards the end of the well-loved Gospel story which resonates with us as one of our gospel readings during the Easter Season. This painting is currently on display in the National Gallery in Merrion Square as part of the "Beyond Caravaggio" exhibition which continues until May 14th.

What particularly struck me about the painting is the reaction of one of the Disciples as Jesus breaks the bread. He leans forward towards Jesus with his hands forcefully grasping the arms of his chair - almost lifting him out of it - as he stares intently at Jesus and his expression is one of absolute incredulity and amazement. Because the artist has captured the moment that this Disciple recognised the Risen Lord as the bread is broken.

There is nobody sitting in the space immediately opposite Jesus which is, I think an invitation for all of us to participate and be present at the Lord's Table.

And this invitation is as fresh and relevant this Easter as it was 2,000 years ago or when Caravaggio lived in the sixteenth century. In the best possible way, we can become very familiar with the Eucharist, which Jesus gave us at the Last Supper on Holy Thursday as it can be celebrated on a weekly basis or, for some of us, more frequently than that.
