

many things are ruined by haste. The main influences in his life would have been home, school, and synagogue.

The first thirty years he spent in Nazareth were not a waste of valuable time. They were of crucial importance to him. During those years he was growing, maturing, and ripening. The day he was baptised by John he did not suddenly become a different person. 'No single event can awaken in us a stranger completely unknown to us.' (Antoine de Saint Exupery). On that day he began to reap the harvest from what had been growing within him. On that day he answered another call.

The desire to give himself to serving his brothers and sisters of the wider Community did not come to him suddenly. It had been sounding inside him during his years in his homeland of Nazareth. Nevertheless, baptism was a very special moment in his life. This was the moment when he decided to commit himself to it and begin it.

There is a great lesson for us in all of this. We must not write off any part of our lives as useless, or any experience as a waste. Everything gives us an opportunity to grow. Life calls for a lot of patient waiting. But we must not wait for something great to happen. We must live the present moment to the full. The future is contained in the present. The future will be the blossoming of the present.

We too are called to grow in wisdom and grace. It took Jesus thirty years to reach maturity and to acquire wisdom. It will take us a lifetime to grow, to mature, and to ripen as human beings and children of God.

The feast of the baptism of Jesus reminds us of our own baptism, and provides us with an opportunity to commit ourselves once again to the Christian life, which is essentially a life of service.

We are not called to save the world, or to solve all its problems. Nevertheless, each of us has our own unique call, in our families, in our work, in our world. We need God's help to be able to be faithful to that call.

Faithfulness to small, everyday tasks is our way of responding to the problems of our time and participating in the work of Jesus.

The Call to Service

Nelson Mandela will go down as one of the greatest leaders of this century. He was instrumental in ending apartheid and bringing about a multiracial society in South Africa. Mandela belongs to the Xhosa people, and grew up in the Transkei. But how did he come to play such a crucial role in the history of his country.

In his autobiography, Long Walk to Freedom (1994, Little, Brown and Company), he tells us that all the currents of his life were taking him away from the Transkei. Yet, he had no epiphany, no singular revelation, no moment of truth. He says: A steady accumulation of insights helped me to see that my duty was to the people as a whole, not just to a particular section of it. The memory of a thousand indignities produced in me an anger, a rebelliousness, a desire to fight the system that imprisoned my people. There was no particular day on which I said, Henceforth I will devote myself to the liberation of my people; instead I simply found myself doing so, and could not do otherwise.

Jesus was thirty years old when he began his public ministry. How did he come to that decision and why did he wait so long to begin the real work of his life? The simple answer is: prior to this he wasn't ready. Jesus was a teacher, not of a subject such as history which can be learnt out of books, but of religion, or better, spirituality. Spirituality has to be lived before it can be taught effectively. This is why time is important. Before the age of about thirty, what experience has a person to draw on?

In Nazareth he was able to grow quietly in the shadows. There were no pressures. No burden of expectations. There was no hurry -
